3.2.

Different types of lamps

An electrical lamp is a device which makes light by the flow of electric current. It is the most common way of artificial light, and it is crucial in our modern society. It supplies interior lighting for buildings and exterior light in the evenings and for the activities which are done at night.

A lamp or bulb is a replaceable component which is designed to create light from electricity. There are many types of lamps:

LEDs are the most energy-efficient bulbs. They produce light up to 90% more efficiently than incandescent light bulbs. They are much more durable (around 25-35 years) and safer than incandescent lights because they are much cooler. LEDs bulbs work thanks to an electric current which passes through a microchip. This microchip illuminates the tiny sources that are called LEDs and the result is light.
